PROFESSOR ALEXANDER C. BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS, or Medicated Compound, for beautifying, curling, preserving, restoring and strengthening the Hair, relieving diseases of the skin, curing rheumatic pains and healing external wounds. Bounded by no geographical lines, the reputation of Barry's Tricopherous pervades the Union. The sales of the article of late years have increased in a ratio that almost exceeds belief.
Professor Barry, after a careful examination of his sales-book, finds that the number of bottles delivered to order, in quantities of from half a gross upward, during the year 1852, was within a trifle of 950,000.
It is unnecessary to present at length the evidences of the wonderful properties of the Tricopherous when the public have furnished such an endorsement as this. The cheapness of the article, and the explanations given of its chemical action upon the hair, the scalp, and in all cases of superficial irritation, first recommended it he inventor desired. Every bottle advertised itself. The effects of the fluid exceeded expectation. It acted like a charm. The ladies would

SUMMER SKETCHES-No. 6. BY MARY J. WINDLE

SHANNONDALE SPRINGS. July 20, 1853. rosebud for your thoughts, fair lady," ex ed a handsome Virginian to Miss the leaned listlessly against the balustrade portico; "what calamity has befallen you? Has your canary, weary of his gilded prison, strangled mself between the wires, or are you inditing an filled with tears, as she replied, "It was a foolish thought, and is not worth your beautiful bribe but you shall have it, such as it is. I was wishing for a fairy to wait on my will, and to bring me some new delight."

"Name your desire, and let me be your fairy! - laughed and shook her head: "Oh! you cannot, for I want to be Queen of Tableau this very night." "And so you shall this very night. Two hours hence we will reassemble in the parlor, each of us prepared to take part in the amusements of this evening." Quite a brilliant circle assembled in the cious dining room at eight o'clock to witness the promised representation of Tableau. Miss was to personate Cleopatra at her toilet, attired by Charmion and Iris.

The curtain suddenly rising revealed the gor geous chamber of the Egyptian queen, and gloriously did the graceful Kate Sthe character.

Arrayed in a rich undress, she lay luxuriously pillowed on a splendid couch, with her rich, black hair unbound and partly gathered in the hands of a graceful girl, who was braiding it with jewels, while darling little Susie -- knelt by the couch and tied the sandal on a foot of exquisite proportions. Magnificent drapery, flowers, and gems, were lavished in rich profusion around; and the whole scene was redolent of beauty, grace, and splendor.

"The rare Egyptian" lay in attitude of charming languor; her dark, eloquent eyes, where love seemed to be dreaming, were half closed; her full crimson lips were parted slightly, and her clear, brown cheek, "most passionately pale," was pillowed on an arm round and graceful as that of Juno. But the lightly-veiled bosom was seen to heave, and, as the first symptom of restlessness on the part of the performer had been agreed upon as the signal for dropping the curtain, the radiant vision vanished from our view.

Again the curtain rose. The flood of rosy light apon the stage illumined a shape that we held our breath to see. Attired in a transparent-flowing slip, with drooping wings and hands clasped languidly before her, a graceful Peri leaned against what seemed to be a cloud, bending her head, and listening, with her large, lustrous eyes upturned, as if in wondering rapture, while a strain of low, delicious melody from some invisible source rose softly on the air. It was soft gliding, and yet with a richness of tone we had never fore-now swelling out into melody that vibrated deep into our beating hearts—then dying away to a whisper faint as the sigh of a child, only to rise again in such thrilling, unearthly sweetness that we could scarcely believe that it was produced by an inhabitant of earth.

You could have heard your heart beat, so pro found, so wrapt was the stillness that prevailed. Not a breath—not a sigh. Bathed in that pale rosy light, soft, radiant, erial as a dream of HeaThe shadowy path where rest awhile the dead, ven, it seemed as though adoring reverence were fair and spotless did she look, the light falling on her soft white slip, and weaving her hair into a Never to my dying day shall I forget the thrilling expression of those statue-like features, solemn rapture, with parted lips, till the music died away as if the sounds had been withdrawn again into The cessation of the music seemed to unbind the chains that held her young soul captive-for a shy, timid glance stole into the sweet childish face, and a faint smile to the parted lips, as she vanished from our view. _! she seemed indeed Dear, lovely Susie a Peri at the gates of Paradise, listening to an air from Heaven, like the south wind over an Eolian harp, bearing on its wings the odors of celestial flowers and the tones of angel voices.

Again the curtain rose. The picture presented was a scene from English history, which came with a strange, deep meaning a low Medicean brow, while the upturned face were cast as if in earnest supplication to Heaven; and the divincly melancholy eyes-made luminous by the living soul that shone through themand the white clasped hands-emblems of purity and fragility-as though imploring mercy. Oh the unutterable agony of that Madonna-like face!

Sold by all the principal merchants and druggists throughout the United States and Canada, Mexico, West Indies, Great Britain, France, &c., by S. PARKER, Penn. avenue, And A. LAMMOND, 7th street, June 4—d&triw6m* Washington.

There was a spiritual loveliness emanating from her face, as if she had caught a glimpse of the glories of her heavenly home, and heard a faint echo of the harpings of an immortal hymn. The mute agony of the weeping attendants who knelt at her feet—the grim executioner, with the glittering axe uplifted. It was too perfect-almost painfully so. There was a superhuman re ality about the picture which made us tremble and it was with a sense of relief that we saw the curtain fall.

Miss C--'s personation of Mary 'chef d'œurre," and her conception of the character perfect.

The concluding picture was a slave market in Constantinople. The unveiling of a young Greek girl before her buyer, a fierce Turk, who sits cross-limbed, surveying with admiring eyes the unconscious being before him. She is a fair aspires to be a council for the Executive also; or young creature, with a lovely face, faultless in its classical proportions. The clear cheek was colorless as marble, and the expression of the full soft mouth ineffably mournful and touching. She eemed totally abstracted from all around, he eyes cast down in earnest thought upon a withered flower in her hand.

Reader, she was dreaming-such a dream, in leed, as adds years to the "inner life"-dreaming of the past and of her far-away home, light nights, its broad terraces, its graceful urns, its delicate shadows piercing the violet sky with their infinite combinations of natural and artificial beauty! Sacred to her are the paths her footsteps trod in the mellowing spring-time, in the summer's soft twilight, and in the glowing autumn. But alas! blended with these scenes rise the memory of parents and friends. She dreams of her mother-how she had faded day by day, and how she had laid her thin hands lovingly upon the forehead of her only child and talked to her of the dark, dark future, when there would be a coffin and a heap of earth between them. And then she dreamed of the hour when that loved and angel mother was laid in her last resting-place.

It rolls by her dead mother's grave, That blue Italian river; The tall white lilies moaning wave, The ripples, sadly chaunting, lave

And she, alone—alone in a foreign land, and in a slavery worse than death. Heavy tears fall upon the clasped fingers. The glittering bubble, which in her childish days she had grasped closely. hich in her childish days she had grasped closely vas crushed within her hand. All that was bright, all that was gladsome; the roses that had clustered about her path—all, all receded as her resent degradation rose up, and the world lay stretched out before her a wilderness. Lost! lost! Precious one!

In thy fresh spring-time growing up alone, No warmth enfolds thee—no sweet dews are sh Like love and patience, over thy young head;
No holy springs feed thy deep inner life,
Nor shelter thee from passion's deadly strife:
Oh Thou—who by this awful fate
Hast lopped and stripped, and made her desole
In the dark bitter floods that o'er her soul Let her not be overwhelmed! So keep her that the blossoms of her youth Shall, in a gracious growth of love and truth, With an abundant harvest honor Thee!

So from her fate shall grow The palm-branch for her hand and for her brow To find their lost one and to worship Thee!

a Peeress of the realm could be invited unless she had been previously presented. Well, in spite of all this, your friend received an invitation, and attended the ball. I entered the room in company with Mr. Ingersoll and suite, and precisely at ten the glass doors flew open and the Queen walked up a long line of noble ladies, preceded by the Lord Chamberlain. First came the Queen of England, and by her side the Queen of Hanover, then the Duchess of Kent and the Princess of Prussia, the Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary, the Duchess of Sutherland and the Maids of Honor. Next came Prince Albert and the King of Hanover, the crown Princes of Prussia, the Duches of Cambridge, the Princes of Saxe-Costomer of the was sick five months, and the Duke of Cambridge, the Princes of Saxe-Costomer of the was sick five months, and the Duke of Cambridge, the Princes of Saxe-Costomer of the was sick five months, and THE CURATIVE POWER OF MONEY .- An emi some folks thought he never would recover, but as soon as the railroad folks paid him, he got well in a few days."-Boston Transcript.

upon which the royal personages seated themselves. The Queen is small, and although not handsome, she has a bright cordial smile which lights up her face charmingly. She dances with great grace and spirit, and is as unaffected as a child. Prince Albert is a splendid-looking personage, but now quite bald, and rather stout. "The Lord Chamberlain was introduced to me, and said as I was not present at the last drawing room I must be presented to her Majesty. He commanded a space to be made in front of the Throne, and lords and ladies all stood back, while I was taken up to her Majesty and presented in a special manner, in the presence of the crowned heads, and the rank and beauty of England. Her Majesty arose and greeted me with a most cordial to supply the demand for want of a sufficient number of operatives."

the unutterable agony of that Madonna-like face! How full of anguish was the appealing look of those soft eyes as they seemed to grow dim with the misery of approaching death. The pitying glance of the priest rested on them in deep commiseration.

A moment and it vanished from our sight; but soon a buzz of awed admiration was heard among the special reception." At last an old duchess said: "Why it is an extraordinary elever person from America, who is treated quite like a queen in her own country.

"There were 2,000 persons present, and I of all the same case, and the final block, appeared Scotland's ill-fated queen. Her hair now fell insoft brown ringlets, as if wishing to burst from its sable confinement in order to shade the touching melancholy of her timid beauty.
